POV
LETTHE LITTLE LIGHT SHINE

African American parents-turned-organizers, alongside students and staff, advocating to keep their top-ranked school, The National Teachers Academy, open when it is threatened to be transformed into a high school favoring the needs of the community’s wealthier residents.

THURSDAY DEC 29 | 9:30PM

AMERICAN EXPERIENCE
TAKEN HOSTAGE

Unfolding like a political thriller, this two-part presentation tells the story of the Iran hostage crisis, when 52 American diplomats, Marines and civilians were held hostage at the American Embassy in Tehran on November 4, 1979.

SUNDAY DEC 18 | 7:00PM & 9:00PM

SECRETS OF THE DEAD
DECODING HIEROGLYPHICS

The first modern translation of Egyptian hieroglyphics happened 200 years ago. Today, archaeologists are busy translating hieroglyphics from an important scribe’s tomb, with symbols thousands of years old.

SUNDAY DEC 11 | 7:00PM
ANTHONY WILLIAMS

URBAN NUTCRACKER

Drawing upon classical ballet, urban tap, hip-hop, swing, flamenco, step and jazz, the performance uniquely retells a Christmas classic as a celebration of multi-cultural communities, transporting viewers to an enchanted world not unlike their own.

UNRIVALED SEWANEE

In the 140 years of college football, nothing else comes close to this team and its season. But most Americans don't know the compelling, historically accurate, and riveting story of the legendary 1899 Sewanee season.

SUNDAY DEC 11 | 10:00PM

PRIDE AND PREJUDICE

A six-part adaptation of the Jane Austen novel. While the arrival of wealthy gentlemen sends her marriage-minded mother into a frenzy, willful and opinionated Elizabeth Bennet (Jennifer Ehle) matches wits with haughty Mr. Darcy (Colin Firth).

Rosie’s Rules welcomes preschoolers and parents into a vibrant community where Rosie Fuentes, a spunky five-year-old, is learning the world’s rules, one preschool adventure (and sometimes, misstep) at a time. The PBS KIDS series invites young kids to explore how they fit into their families, local communities and broader worlds by featuring dynamic, diverse characters and lots of laughs!

Rosie’s Rules is a family-centric show. Rosie is a bilingual Mexican American girl from suburban Texas who is just beginning to learn about how the world around her works. As a child, Mariana Díaz-Wionczek, the show’s executive producer, didn’t see herself represented much on television. Now a parent, she hopes many children, including her own, will see themselves in Rosie’s family (and their racially and ethnically diverse community members). “Seeing yourself and aspects of your reality on TV builds self-esteem and a sense of identity as you’re developing as a child,” Díaz-Wionczek says.

Rosie’s Rules honors blended family cultures. Rosie is emerging bilingual (she speaks Spanish and English) and bicultural (her mom hails from rural Wisconsin, and her dad Papá is originally from Mexico City). To round out the family, we get to meet Tía Margarita, Rosie’s aunt, who is a chef and owns a restaurant, and Javi, who is Rosie’s cousin.

While Rosie and her parents (and younger brother Iggy and older half-sister Crystal) live in suburban Texas, Rosie regularly video calls Abuela (her grandma), who lives in Mexico City. We get to see glimpses of Abuela living her active lifestyle—and even Abuela’s friends. Kids can relate to Rosie’s antics—and that humor will grab children’s attention, helping them learn how social studies is a part of their daily lives.

Rosie’s Rules provides engaging learning moments. It’s not just fun (though there is plenty of it)—the curriculum on Rosie’s Rules sets it apart. Rosie’s Rules explores what preschoolers think they know about how the world works and then guides them to answer their own questions through curiosity and discovery.
