Reclaiming History

April 1994: In Rwanda, the parents of two-year-old Samuel Ishimwe are murdered. They were just two of some one million people who, over the course of several months, were brutally killed in the genocide of the country's Tutsi minority. Thirty years later, Samuel wants to know the reasons why. He sets out on a search for clues that takes him from Rwanda to Germany and Belgium. Both nations are former colonial powers of the small East African nation. Does this mean they may bear some responsibility for the terrible events that befell Samuel's homeland? A question explored in the documentary Reclaiming History – Colonial Roots of the Genocide in Rwanda.

GLOBAL US

Education for All! But How?

Nothing less than their future is at stake: Emilija Dorne and 20,000 other school children sing the Latvian national anthem at the tops of their voices. The students are protesting Latvian government plans to close or rebuild schools in smaller towns and villages. The move comes in response to a lack of money, teachers and pupils in many locations across this EU nation. For Emilija, the reform would mean a 30-kilometer commute to a school in a larger town. Global Us appraises the situation in Latvia and other countries worldwide in terms of literacy, equal opportunities for girls and the chances of advancement through education.

The Tube

It's as much a part of London as Big Ben or Tower Bridge: the London Underground. The first ever section of a subterranean railway was opened in the British capital in 1863. This makes the London Underground the oldest subway in the world. In the series "Epic Record Setters," Euromaxx answers some FAQs about the London Underground, including: Why is it colloquially known as "The Tube"? What's the story behind the logo? What's the best way to pay? And why are travelers constantly told to "Mind the gap"?

North Korea's Kim Dynasty

North Korea – geographically diminutive, but geopolitically often the center of global attention. The nation is isolated, and its population impoverished. Propaganda, intimidation and surveillance are the pillars of North Korean society. These clandestine structures remain hidden from most. Nevertheless, the Kim dynasty also wields global power. What strategies does it employ here? A question at the heart of the two-part documentary North Korea's Kim Dynasty – A Contemporary Dictatorship.

THE 77 PERCENT

Alcohol – When Is It too Much?

Alcohol – it's a social lubricant, a way to wind down and often an initiation into adulthood. In many places around the world alcohol is an accepted legal drug and yet its addictive qualities can also make break individuals, families and communities. In central Kenya, cheap liquor, illicit brews and heavy drinking have, over the years, led to increased conflicts within families, as well as calls by both government and society to address the issue. In the Street Debate, The 77 Percent wants to find out how young Kenyans view the issue, hear the personal stories surrounding alcohol abuse, and find out when drinking actually becomes a problem.
