Are We Living in Polarized Worlds?

A question at the heart of the second season of the documentary series Us and Them. Increasingly, society is splitting into opposing camps – over issues big and small. Will Artificial Intelligence save or kill us? Which war is just, and which is unjust? How are we dealing with the climate crisis? The world's increasing complexity is apparently resulting in a growing polarization among people. But does everything really need to be so irreconcilable? Are we still capable of adopting other perspectives and developing a greater understanding of each other?

Humpback whales off the coast of La Réunion

DOCFILM

The Rewards of Ocean Conservation

Humpback whales and sea turtles were driven to the brink of extinction. This is because for a long time, these ocean giants were hunted by humans. Now, dedicated individuals on La Réunion, the Comoros and Madagascar are showing how we can respectfully coexist with these marine creatures. Conservation measures have, meanwhile, helped the populations recover. But human activities still pose a threat to these animals. If they are to survive, humans must make the switch – from traditional nature protection to sustainable harmonious coexistence. The documentary Of Whales and Turtles – The Rewards of Ocean Conservation shows how this can work.

Chongqing by night

DOCFILM

Night Falls in Chongqing

For an authentic experience of China, you can't miss Chongqing. The city in southwest China is home to around 32 million people – in an area the size of Austria. This makes Chongqing one of the largest cities in the world in terms of area. After sundown, like something straight out of a sci-fi movie, young locals chase their dreams in urban canyons. Life in this megacity feels freer than in Beijing or Shanghai. In the documentary film Night Falls in Chongqing designated drivers, live streamers and fortune seekers show their exciting city by night.

TRANSFORMING BUSINESS

The Business with Old and New Clothes

One of the newest fast fashion retailers on the ground, Shein, is planning to go public on the London Stock Exchange. Even as consumers cite the environment as a concern when making purchases, fast fashion is a lucrative business. But what happens to the clothes that nobody wants to wear anymore? Often, they're sold to companies that bring them to other countries to sell. Chile is the top used clothing importer in South America. But its once pristine Atacama Desert is now drowning in unwanted clothing. Transforming Business wants to know whether new recycling laws like those in France can solve the problem.

EUROMAXX

Small Projects, Big Changes

Just do it. That's what 11-year-old Lenny, from North-Rhine Westphalia, thought to himself. Worried about climate change, he went door-to-door in his neighborhood asking for donations. He collected so much money that he was able to plant his own small forest. In a new series "Small Projects, Big Changes," Euromaxx profiles individuals and their creative ideas. People who, in the face of monumental challenges, don't put their heads in the sand, but take action. They all show how ultimately, an initially small idea has the potential to turn into something big.
